1. Reaffirm the importance of the Quito Process as an intergovernmental technical space for the development of proposals, the exchange of best practices and the monitoring of shared problems, with a view to promoting an increasingly coordinated regional response to the human mobility of Venezuelan refugees and migrants in the region with a commitment to promote and protect their dignity and human rights.

2. Reiterate their concern about the continued human mobility of Venezuelan refugees and migrants, whose migratory flow to date has exceeded 6 million people, of whom more than 5 million are either in transit or in destination countries in Latin America and the Caribbean according to the report prepared in June 2022 by the Response for Venezuelans (R4V), which is part of the Regional Refugee and Migrant Response Plan (RMRP).

3. Express concern about the possibility that the regional situation caused by the flow of Venezuelan refugees and migrants may become invisible, urging increased efforts by the international community to provide humanitarian and development assistance, including through initiatives such as the International Solidarity Conference on the Venezuelan Refugee and Migrant Crisis, which was held in 2019, 2020 and 2021.

4. Reaffirm the need for increased international technical and financial support through greater commitments from donor countries, international financial institutions, development actors and the private sector, with the intention of contributing to the efforts made by these countries to provide humanitarian assistance to different migratory movements and populations living in destination communities.

5. Recognize efforts made by member countries of the Quito Process to provide health assistance to Venezuelan refugees and migrants during the COVID-19 pandemic as well as including them in vaccination programs without discrimination. At the same time, express concern for the effects that the pandemic continues to have on the most vulnerable refugee and migrant populations, as well as their host communities, and continue to provide coordinated and inclusive post-COVID-19 health assistance, especially in terms of vaccination and mental health mechanisms.

6. Recognize the constant progress made by member countries with the development of standards and procedures that facilitate and simplify the migratory regularization of Venezuelan refugees and migrants and that promote their integration into host societies, ensuring their access to fundamental rights.

7. Highlight progress with the design of strategies that promote socioeconomic integration, the integration of public employment services platforms, employment, self-employment and entrepreneurship. These initiatives allow refugees and migrants to exercise their rights, participate in social dialogue and contribute to the growth of host societies as engines of development while reducing discrimination, intolerance and xenophobia.

8. Reaffirm the commitment to guarantee the right to inclusive, equitable and quality education for refugees and migrants on the move.

9. Highlight the organization of the thematic preparatory workshops for the VIII Technical Meeting - Brasilia Chapter - held in April 2022, which through facilitating exchanges of knowledge, information and good practices, made it possible to continue with the development of technical proposals that are adapted to new regional and national realities.

10. It is important to highlight the organization and holding of three webinars in May 2022. These made it possible to highlight relevant topics such as host communities, groups in situations of vulnerability and the studies carried out and progress made with the migratory regularization of Venezuelan refugees and migrants. These webinars involved the participation of member countries, the Group of Friends of the Quito Process, United Nations agencies, civil society organizations that support the States and Venezuelan refugee and migrant organizations, local authorities and the private sector.

integration of migrants and refugees with full protection of their labor rights; adopt territorial strategies to materialize the opportunities that human mobility can generate for local development and contribute to the construction of diverse and supportive communities; and strengthen regional cooperation mechanisms and the adoption of regional policies on the mutual recognition of qualifications and competencies, labor intermediation and social protection.

C) Continue to strengthen national capacities for the international protection of refugees with support from the Group of Friends and the Asylum Capacity Support Group, when appropriate; strengthen initiatives and programs for access to regularization of migratory status for Venezuelan nationals, promoting correlation and complementarity among the various legal statutes, including refugee status, statelessness, temporary protection, migratory status, complementary protection and regularization mechanisms; continue to promote the identification and exchange of best practices in relation to refugee status determination procedures through consultations with National Commissions for Refugees (CONAREs) or equivalent bodies interested in participating. Taking into account existing regional forums, structure joint initiatives for training and the development of best practices, including: the optimization of mechanisms for identifying international protection needs; strengthening of case identification and referral systems; development of biometric registration tools and computerized management of applications; and the establishment of accelerated, simplified, merged and special procedures for refugee status determination, in accordance with national legislation, among others.

D) Disseminate and promote the guiding principles and standards for temporary orientation and reception centers and support spaces that strengthen systems of care for refugees and migrants in Venezuela as a technical working document produced by the Quito Process; organize technical exchanges between authorities and orientation centers, managers of support spaces, international and regional agencies and civil society organizations, with a focus on field staff through virtual and face-to-face meetings; recognize the leading role of the States and local institutions in strengthening the capacities of the centers in accordance with the policies, systems and social protection network of each State; and continue to update the online platform for the regional mapping of services on the R4V Platform.

E) Reaffirm the right to family unity as a fundamental group of societies and a principle that is inherent to the universal recognition of the family; recognize the difficulties and vulnerabilities to which families are exposed when separated; learn from the assessment that synthesizes and reports on existing mechanisms for the family reunification of refugees and migrants at the regional level, which can provide a basis for visualizing best practices in the region and will help identify challenges and opportunity areas to improve reunification processes and generate specific strategies for the member countries of the Quito Process; and highlight the importance of the integration and inclusion of refugee and migrant families in their host communities.

F) Finalize and validate the Operational Guide for the specialized protection of children in processes of human mobility, in consultation with member countries, which seeks to promote the application of international standards on children’s rights, human rights and international refugee law in the region; and reaffirm interest in continuing to make progress with the exchange of best practices in the area of child and adolescent protection and carry out periodic efforts for the technical strengthening of front-line staff responsible for the care of refugee and migrant children and adolescents from Venezuela in coordination with United Nations agencies.

G) Continue to strengthen assistance and provision of health services to the migrant and refugee population with HIV/AIDS, including sentinel surveillance and information management with safeguarding of information in order to improve the quality and disaggregation of data, indicators and variables that are essential for epidemiological surveillance of HIV events; continue efforts to accelerate the transition to TLD (Tenofovir, Lamivudine and Dolutegravir); establish technical dialogue and spaces for articulation between countries to discuss the portability of treatment; emphasize the importance of defining clear health mechanisms so that refugees and migrants know where and how to access health services and establish broad communication strategies for this population; continue discussions with countries in the region about the Cross-Border Action Plan (TAP) for the expansion of health services coverage and for the elimination of barriers to access to antiretroviral treatment (ART) and examine the role of the Quito Process in its implementation, including the identification of possible convergences with other thematic axes; integrate efforts against discrimination and stigmatization of migrants, refugees and asylum seekers living with HIV into the Regional Strategy against Xenophobia in the framework of the Quito Process while using intercultural, gender and human rights approaches; promote a technical cooperation and regional coordination agenda on HIV and Sexually Transmitted Infections (STIs) for refugees and migrants in transit, ensuring the timely delivery of information and facilitating tools and resources for Combined Prevention, as well as early detection through rapid testing.

H) Urge member countries to continue working on the implementation of the Regional Coordination Mechanism with technical and financial support from the IOM for the Prevention, Protection and Assistance and Prosecution of the Crime of Trafficking in Persons based on dialogue as part of the workshop on trafficking in persons, where the first results of the baseline for the collection of information on the thematic areas proposed in the Mechanism were presented and the next steps to be taken for its implementation were prioritized; articulate the required actions for the implementation of international cooperation projects in this area identified with the Group of Friends of the Quito Process in alignment with the needs and priorities of member countries.

I) Ensure that Venezuelan refugees and migrants are included in national vaccination plans against COVID-19; highlight the importance of collecting disaggregated data on the populations of refugees and migrants vaccinated and cared for in health systems for the analysis and improvement of evidence-based public policies; recognize the relevance of efforts for the promotion of mental health for the national, migrant and refugee populations, taking into account the prolonged impact of the COVID-19 pandemic; consider psychosocial care models adapted to the realities faced by each country and the specific conditions faced by different groups, especially children, adolescents, women, older adults and vulnerable groups; and add a health approach to the Regional Strategy against Xenophobia to reduce stigma against the refugee and migrant population, especially by health service professionals.
J) Promote efforts to address the needs of the different groups in vulnerable situations among the Venezuelan refugee and migrant population with a focus on the intersectionality between them, understanding the refugee and migrant population as a heterogeneous group facing multiple overlapping and coexisting layers of vulnerability, including children and adolescents, homeless people, people with disabilities and indigenous groups; develop efficient information systems to identify vulnerable populations and their characteristics, compiling disaggregated data to overcome statistical invisibility and avoid the overlapping of assistance; and highlight the importance of articulation and collaboration between public policies on migration, health, housing, education, labor and others to work more efficiently and maximize resources and capacities.

K) Strengthen the capacities of the host communities of Venezuelan refugees and migrants, highlight the benefits that the integration of the Venezuelan refugee and migrant population can bring to host communities and raise awareness about the importance of supporting these communities for the sustainability of integration efforts and the promotion of rights; identify and promote regional community best practices that benefit both the refugee and migrant population and host communities; share experiences and best practices from local stakeholders, civil society and the private sector, such as practices that promote the professional recruitment of refugees and migrants, implementation of inclusion, diversity and social responsibility policies, and investment in internal communication and training, which will promote collective benefits and encourage new similar initiatives in the private sector; organize spaces for exchanges between actors involved in networks and host communities with a view to building tools to facilitate connections involving local governments, Venezuelan communities and coalitions of the Venezuelan diaspora that have managed to connect positively with their host communities, identifying experiences and providing testimonies and placing these stakeholders at the center of this reflection.

L) Take note of the discussions coordinated by the Pro Tempore Presidency of Brazil on the issue of migratory regularization and procedures for the determination of refugee status, especially regarding the legal and practical barriers to accessing registration and document regularization processes for protection and economic, social, labor and other types of inclusion that lead to the full integration of Venezuelan refugees and migrants; consider the adoption of administrative facilities, the relaxation of criteria and the adoption of mechanisms that allow regularization through different legal channels, promoting coordination and complementarity between refugee status, stateless status, complementary protection status and special regularization mechanisms, propose relevant migratory legislation and facilitate access to citizenship or nationality as appropriate.

M) Continue to strengthen commitments from member countries of the Quito Process to consider the specific and differentiated needs of Venezuelan migrant and refugee girls, female adolescents and women in the design and implementation of policies and programs for social protection, employment, health, education, and prevention, care and comprehensive assistance in situations involving gender-based violence. Support empowerment and economic autonomy initiatives aimed at young and vulnerable women that help promote social cohesion in the host communities.
